Instructive Discipline

Perhaps the greatest ingredient missing in so many homes in America today is discipline. It is easy to look at the problems this society has and trace them to a lack of discipline in the home. Behavior problems in the home, in the schools, in society in general, arise when there is no consistent discipline within the home. Strained relationships between parents and children often result from a lack of caring, loving discipline. When the home lacks discipline, then the children grow up without a vitally important quality they need to lead lives that are meaningful and productive.

But God would have a home that possesses discipline. This responsibility rests in the hands of the parents. They must instill discipline within their children, if they will be pleasing to God. This discipline is exercised through three means: instructive discipline, corrective discipline, and self-discipline.

Instructive discipline: the word "discipline," means "training that corrects, molds, or perfects the mental faculties or moral character." It is by nature an instructive process, a training process. Instructive discipline focuses on training one in the proper ways to live and to behave. This must be the foundation of all discipline in the home. If members of a family (whether children or parents) have not been instructed properly, how can that home be expected to demonstrate the discipline which God approves? There must be a strong emphasis on learning the right way to live. And of course, "…the ways of the LORD are right, and the just shall walk in them…" (Hosea 14:9).

If parents are to be successful in training children to know and to love the way the Lord, they must know it, love it, and live it themselves first. A father who has no respect for the law of God should not expect his son to grow up to live it. "Do as I say, not as I do," just does not work. Under the Old Law, parents were commanded to teach their children the word of God in all the routines of life. Deuteronomy 6:7 (ESV) " You shall teach them diligently to your children, and shall talk of them when you sit in your house, and when you walk by the way, and when you lie down, and when you rise."

Many Bible teachers refer to this principle (and properly so) when teaching about parents' responsibility to instruct their children. But do not lose sight of the fact that this command of God to those parents stressed the parents' responsibility to know the law and to live by it themselves. The Lord said to parents, "You shall bind them as a sign on your hand, and they shall be as frontlets between your eyes." Let us work together with the Bible to bring up our families in the Lord.
